mp4 I'm editing has so many errors that I would like to purge them from the game. I'm about to do this, but I'd like to ask if it would be OK to burn the game to a disc and re-use the disc for a new game. Or would I be OK if I put the disc in my drive and then have to restart my computer so that the discs can be read? A: The problem is that you are using data discs, it's technically possible but not that simple. You should really save your project folder to something else (like your backup or an online backup). If you don't have a backup you should really make one before doing anything! Do you have any of the files that you need on your disc? The easiest way to go about that would be to just burn a copy of your MPQ to a new disc and save it somewhere else, if you have the other disc you could extract the contents of the MPQ and see if there's any data on there you want to keep. If you think you are going to have any problems then you could try to save the MPQ to the disc using the disc manager (on windows) and see if it'll help, or at least give you some more idea of what you need to backup. So, I got a service from a friend who had done it, and I joined it. In the initial days, it was a huge hassle. I spent almost one hour a day to file the return. But now, as it has become easier and simpler, I can do it in a few minutes. Initially, I did not want to spend time on this and that. But now, I feel it's worth. I have also started giving tips to my friends on how to file their 82157476af
